FULFORD BROUGHT IN

He Denies That He Wronged the Long Distance Telephone Co.

Was in No Hurry to Get Away from Town, and Notified Them of His Proposed Departure.

E. D. Fulford, the acused foreman of construction of the Long Distance Telephone Company, was brought here from Syracuse, N. Y., yesterday, by detective Thornton. The prisoner was slated on the charge of forgery. Immediately after his arrival his brother, J. W. Fulford, called at the station house and was admitted to the cell. Shortly afterward Attorney Merrill Moores was summoned. It is understood that the Fulfords have retained Attorney Moores in the case. No effort was made yesterday to secure the prisoner's release, but bond will be offered as soon as the amount is named by the court. The prisoner is forty years old and well educated. He talks freely of his trouble, but denies the charges. He claims that he was glad to come here, where he is satisfled that he can prove his innocence. "The first intimation I had that I was in bad ordor with the company," he said, "was two weeks ago when the superintendent of this division came here and demanded my advance money, amounting to $1,500 or $2,000. Moister is the auditor of the company and was here at the same time. I knew that they looked upon me with suspicion and I waited around the Grand Hotel for a week to give them an oppor-tunity to charge me with something. There was nothing further said to me and onlast Saturday I left for my home at Utica, N. Y., where my wife had already gone. Be-fore leaving I wrote to Moister and informed him that I was going home. made no attempt to sneak away and what I did was square and honest. I forged no vouchers and if there was any of it done my clerk, Martland, must have been guilty of it. He made out the reports and signed them and sent them to the com-

The prisoner produced a clipping from the New York Evening World, in which the secretary and chief counsel of the Long Distance Telephone Company are quoted an interview. The secretary states that Fulford's irregularities have been immensely magnified and says that the only charge against him is for the offense of having raised one voucher to the amount

AMUSEMENTS.

Lewis Morrison's "Faust" at the Grand Opera House.

"Faust," with all its witchery of colored lights and brilliant electrical effects, was played to the two largest audiences yesterday that have gathered in the Grand in any one day this season. The house was filled in the afternoon, and last night standing room only was to be obtained. The audience was largely made up of students, some of whom could not restrain their overflowing football enthusiasm between the acts. One young boiler maker with a hooroo-hooroo-bully-for-old-Purdue shout attracted the attention of Mr. Eddy and was unceremeniously shown to the door. The managers had been on the lookout for any attempt to break up the performance, and thus promptly squelched one in its incipiency. Mr. Lewis Morrison gave his original creation of Mephisto without any noticeable change from his last performance here. His startling and bold impersonation of the evil, designing prince of darkness made of that entertaining individual the same cunning and crafty villain that has brought the clever actor both fame and fortune in years past, and which is apparently as popular as ever. It is not astonishing with what evident enjoyment the people rush to behold this novel creation. All stories, both ancient and modern, paint Satan as an extraordinarily amusing personage, and Morrison has simply followed the one which all humanity has given him. It is little wonder that moral mankind willingly embraces sin when presented under so charming and seductive a guise. The heart goes out to chaste and sweetly nurtured Marguerite, but, like Faust, the will is too weak to resist the tempter. To give the devil his due, as Mephisto advises, one must commend Mr. Morrison for his clever expose of the many frailties of human nature, not the least of which is feminine. A more simple-acting Marguerite than Miss Florence Roberts could hardly be imagined. Mr. Edward Elsner as Faust is not exactly the man one would like to see in the part. Mrs. Nelson Kneass, as Dame Martha, introduces some pratty comedy that provoked applause little less demonstrative than that given a Morrison himself. At the fall of the curtain on the second act the four principal people were called before the curtain. "Faust" will continue at the Grand the remainder of the

English's-"Doris."

Effie Ellsler, with her new play, "Doris," had two very flattering audiences at English's yesterday. For a plot, the play is of a large company. built on old lines, depending for its greatest climax on a poisoning episode, an almost exact counterpart of that in "Monbars," seen at the Grand recently. The author, Mr. Robert Drouet, takes the part of Kenneth Ashley, the hero, marrying a divorced woman after giving his word to his best friend that he would never be guilty of such an act. Interest centers about the intricate experiences of Doris Vane, a character assumed by Miss Ellsler. Her husband, a convict supposed to be dead, relentlessly appears on the scene, forcing her to a series of compromising incidents which she vainly attempts to conceal from her husband. There is nothing about the nature of the situation which should lead her to such deception, and it remains apparent that the author has unwisely introduced a strained effect for the sake of interest in the drama. The piece can, therefore, hardly be said to be natural. There is a kindhearted old rector, whose part is taken by the veteran C. W. Couldock, now almost an octogenarian, and who still plays with remarkable strength. Couldock will be remembered as the original Dunstan Kirke in "Hazel Kirke," and received splendid recognition. Frank Weston, who plays the part of an Irish doctor, was popular with the audience. There are two villains in the piece of the male persuasion and one female assistant, who give adequate impersonations, but nothing remarkable. "Doris" will be repeated to-night and to-morrow matinee, while "Hazel Kirke" is the bill for Saturday night. Miss Ellsier and her company will repeat "Doris" to-night and at the matinee to-morrow. At the matinee pretty souvenirs, in the shape of pictures of Miss Eilsler and scenes from the play, will be given to all the ladies in attendance.

Waldmann's specialty company is giving good show at the Empire this week. Matinee to-day, night prices. Mr. A. Y. Pearson's sporting drama, "The District Fair," is underlined for the Park all next week, with its great racing scene and other sensational effects. The Fitz & Webster Farce Comedy Company will present "A Breezy Time," a piece that is full of fun and good specialties, at English's the first part of next week. Mr. J. K. Emmet, who has succeeded his father in popular favor, will appear for the first time as a star in this city at the Grand the first part of next week in his new play, "Fritz in a Madhouse," which is said to be the best of the "Fritz" series. Miss Helene Mora, the well-known singer, will be seen at the Empire all next week with Hyde's comedians, one of the leading high-class vaudaviile companies. She has a fine repertoire of songs to introduce, with | into health-giving slumber. which she is making a big hit everywhere. She, it will be remembered, popularized "Comrades," "That is Love," "He Never cares to Wander." Hyde's comedians includes Hayden and Hetherton, Ola Hayden, the Rays, Faulks and Semons, Jessica, the American two Macs, the Allisons, and the Imperial Zannetto troupe. Colleges and Football.

CANTLON-KELLY, The marriage of Miss Mary Kelly and Mr. Thomas Cantlon was celebrated yesterday morning at St. John's Church before a large number of friends and relatives. Father Gavisk performed the ceremony. The bride wore a full bridal costume of white silk, with veil and a bouquet of roses. Her attendants were Miss Theresa Ward and her sister, Miss Kelly, Miss Ward's gown was of blue silk and Miss Kelly's of pink, and each wore a white felt hat and white gloves and carried roses. The groom's attendants were his brother, Mr. William Cantlon, and Mr. William Creeber and Mr. Sullivan. After the service at the church the wedding party and a few friends went to the home of the bride's parents, on West New York street, where a breakfast was served, and at noon Mr. and Mrs. Cantlon left for a wedding trip. They will be absent a short time, and when they return will reside with Mr. and Mrs. Kelly. They were the recipients of many handsome gifts from friends here and elsewhere. (From the Bowen-Merrill Company.) In "The Letters of James Russell Lowell," edited by Charles Eliot Norton, readers make the personal acquaintance of Mr. Lowell in a new aspect. The work has been so judiciously edited that it has an autoblographic character, though there is even more self-revelation in the letters than there would be in an autobiography. Mr. Lowell had the rare and true quality in letter-writing-for he speaks (only with pen in hand) to his correspondents as though they were present friends, informally, impulsively. The personality that becomes more familiar through the publication of these letters was a force in the crisis of American history, and must always be regarded as an expression of the best elements in the Nation's life; and doubtless the letters could not have been more suitably prepared by any other hand than that of the author's friend, the editor. The work is in two volumes of generous size, with portraits. Cloth, $8. New York: Har-

"The Christ Child in Art," by Henry Van Dyke, is a successful attempt to express in the language of to-day and the words of common life the meaning of the gospel narrative of the infancy of Jesus. The theme is a beautiful one, and in this work it is treated by an author who is the adherent of no exclusive school in art, a a devotee of no particular theory; an admirer of good work wherever and however it may be done; and the result of his sympathetic efforts is a volume of singular excellence and completeness, that joins to many of the tenderest pictures a com-mentary that makes their meaning plainer, yet without destroying their charm. There are numerous illustrations, many being after the celebrated paintings by masters.

The work is published in handsome form and richly embellished. Cloth, orna-

Harper & Brothers publish "Essays, Speeches and Memoirs of Field Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke." The two large volumes contain the Field Marshal's utterances on the social condition of Poland, the boundary between France and Germany, the Eastern question, the military and political situation of the Ottoman empire, speeches in the "Customs Parliament," Reichstag and Prussian House of Lords; and perhaps most interesting of all are the personal recollections, written by men and women who knew the great soldier as a man in private life. The essays are translated by Charles Flint McClumpha, Ph. D.; the speeches by Major C. Barter, D. A. A. G., and the memoirs by Mary Herms. There are two full-page portraits drawn by Von Moltke himself. Cloth, $5.

Harper & Brothers publish "A History of the Roman Empire, from Its Foundation to the death of Marcus Aurelius," by J. B. Bury, M. A., fellow and tutor of Trinity College, Dublin. The author has written directly from original sources and has presented in a clear and interesting style the political, military and social history of the empire from its foundation to the death of Marcus Aurelius, together with chapters on Roman art, life at Rome, manners of women, houses, baths, the circus Maximus, and other interesting matters appropriate to the subject. The work is adapted for use as a text-book in universities or schools. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50.

"Old Court Life in France," by Mrs. Frances Elliot, author of "The Diary of an Idle Woman in Italy," is a story of the court life of France, from Francis I to Louis XIV. France is very rich in memoir history, and out of this material Mrs. Elliot has made a delightful book. brings out in a strong light the more pe-culiar and interesting bits of character and history which the author has met with in her long course of reading. It is an historical romance of decided interest. The two volumes are illustrated with portraits and views of some of the old chateaux. Cloth, gilt tops, $4. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

A new and revised edition of "Triumphant Democracy," by Andrew Carnegie, brings the work down so as to embrace results of the census of 1890. The general character of the work is well known. It is an enthusiastic presentation of the claim of the United States to be the greatest country, the government of the United States the best government, and the people of the United States the most prosperous and progressive people in the world. It contains a great deal of information massed and presented in an impressive form. Cloth, $3. New York: Charles Scrib-

The fifth series of the "Library Gems' (G. P. Putnam's Sons) is fully up to the standard of the previous issues. This series comprise Ruskin's "Ideas of Truth," with portrait; Rossetti's "The House of Life." with portrait; De Quincey's "Essay on Conversation," with portrait; Keats's "The Eve of St. Agnes;" Matthew Arnold's "The Study of Poetry," with portrait. These volumes are well named "Literary Gems." The works themselves are classics of their kind, and the publishers have given them a most attractive forn. Morocco covers, gilt tops, 75 cents each.

In "My Year in a Log Cabin," Mr. W. D. Howells gives some charming glimpses of a period in his life when, in 1850, the elder Howells removed the family from the surroundings of a city, and the ruins of a newspaper enterprise, to a quiet place on the Little Miami river. There, in the rude novelty of log-eabin life, the "bit of autoblography" begins, and with what delightful humor and tender pathos it continues to the end may be imagined by those familiar with the author's style. The work is published in Harper's "Black and White" series. Cloth, ornamental, 50 cents.

In "Riders of Many Lands" Col. Theodore A. Dodge, of the United States army, treats of the horses and horsemen of all nations. He seems to have made a thorough study of the subject, and presents the result in style at once interesting and instructive. The work contains a good many graphic pictures of life outside of horses and horsemen, but these constitute the principal theme, and it is treated with the enthusiasm of one who loves his mount, whether it be shaggy or sleek. The illustrations are numerous and admirable. Cloth, gilt tops, $4. New York: Harper &

"Evening Tales," is a collection of short stories, purporting to have been translated from the French of Frederic Ortole, by Joel Chandler Harris, author of "Uncle Remus." The alleged translation is probably a fiction. The stories are in Uncle Remus's well-known style, except that they are all in oure English instead of a dia-lect. Brother Rabbit, Brother Goat, Brother Wolf and all the rest of the brethren are there in good plain English clothes. There are fifteen stories in the volume, Cloth, $1. New York: Charles Scribners

"In Far Lochaber," a novel by William Black, opens with a Sabbath night in a small town of Lanarkshire, in Scotland. A daughter of a minister of the place rebels against the fettered life of Kirk o' Shields, and from that time forward the reader's interest steadily grows as the author ingeniously unfolds the characters of his story, and depicts the struggles of conscience, the passions of the will, and the triumphs of the good and true "In Far Lochaber." This is a new edition, revised by the author. Cloth, 80 cents. New York:

Harper & Bros. Charles Scribner's Sons continue the "Women of Versailles" series from the French of Imbert de Saint-Amand, by the publication of "The Court of Louis Besides interesting character sketches of some of the most famous as well as some of the most infamous women of that period, it contains graphic pictures of the social conditions of the times and the events that led up to the revolution. The work is published uniform in style with other volumes of the same series. "Studies of Travel," by E. A. Freeman, consists of a series of papers describing several journeys made in Greece and Italy by Professor Freeman toward the latter part of his life. He was thoroughly familiar with the ancient history of the countries. The papers are mostly of an historical and archaeological interest, but here and there are delightful glimpses of modern Greece and Italy. There are two volumes, each with a frontispiece in photogravure. Each volume is complete in itself. Cloth

75 cents. New York: George P. Putnam's "Rachel Stanwood," by Lucy Gibbons Morse, is designated as "a story of the middle of the nineteenth century." It relates to the time and seenes of the antislavery agitation in New York city, about 1850. It depicts life among the Quakers, the protection of fugitive slaves from their pursuers, the phases of an anti-slavery fair, etc. The story is well told and possesses real interest. Cloth, $1.25. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

"The Boy Travelers in Southern Europe" is the fourteenth volume of the boy traveler series by T. W. Knox. It relates the adventures of two youths in a journey through Italy, southern France and Spain, with visits to Gibraltar and the islands of Sicily and Malta. Valuable information and abundant entertainment are provided on every page, and there is a profusion of il-lustrations. A first-rate book for boys. Uniform in style and price with other books of the same series. Cloth, $3.

"To Right the Wrong," by Edna Lyall, is a novel, the scene of which is laid in England during the Puritan and Roundhead times of the seventeenth century. John Hampden, one of England's truest patriots and bravest men, figures as a prominent character. The story is really a historical novel, and is original, strong and well written. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50. New York: Harper & Brothers.

"Mental Development in the Child," by Prof. W. Preyer, of the University of Jena, treats of the growth of the mind in childhood, its special object being to initiate mothers into the mysteries of the development of the infant mind. An in-teresting and instructive work. It is trans-lated from the German by W. H. Brown and published in the international educational series by D. Appleton & Co., New "Parables from Nature," by Mrs. Alfred Gatly, consists of stories in which familiar facts in the natural world are made the basis of instructive parables. They are delightful reading for young people, and will serve to stimulate a love of nature and a perception of higher truths. The illustrations by Longpre are appropriate and beautiful. Two volumes. Cloth, $1.75 each. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Mr. W. D. Howells is achieving popularity as a writer of clever plays. His latest, "Evening Dress," is a farce in which he makes a great deal of fun out of very slight materials. Everything in the play fits except one coat, and on that turns the plot of the play. It is published in the "Black and White" series by Harper & Bros. Illustrated. Cloth, 50 cents,

D. Appleton & Co. publish a new edition of "Picciola, the Prisoner of Fenestrellea, or Captivity Captive," by X. B. Saintine. The work is one of the most charming and popular of French classics, and is done into classic English. The illustrations, by G. F. Gueldry, a French artist of note, are numerous and fine. Cloth, gilt, $1.50.

A Thing to Be Looked Into. Philadelphia Inquirer.

The season which has just closed has been an unusual one in respect to the widely separated districts which have suffered from drought. No single quarter has been affected, but wide areas in many parts of the country. Lands which are cultivated by irrigation have had a particularly good opportunity to show their value, and many men have been led to study the practicability of irrigation in districts where this method has not heretofore been practiced. The season has taught that where irrigation can be practiced it is among the best of safeguards against loss of the crop. There are many farms where irrigation could be applied in part, if not in whole, and it might better to crowd to the utmost the few fields which could be irrigated than to spread over the whole farm a larger amount of work to less purpose. It is frequently the case that small streams could be util ized for irrigating a few acres, and the water distributed without much cost. Windmills have also been found of service in raising and distributing water upon mar-ket garden and fruit plots. It would be well for farmers who have suffered from lack of moisture to look into this matter and see whether they could not irrigate,
